Not all teaching careers occur in the classroom. Whether you are looking to be a classroom teacher or have a teaching career in a museum, community site or experiential education program, our practicum provides you with planning and resource collection skills a teacher needs. The Enrichment Studies Unit (ESU) at Queen's is looking for a motivated teacher candidate to create a teacher resource binder for our Teacher Enrichment programs. The ESU Alternative Practicum student would work with ESU staff to research hands-on STEM learning activities and information to compile, revise and prepare curriculum-linked resource binders to complement the ESU Teacher Enrichment courses. During the practicum the student will also learn about teaching in non-traditional classrooms and community experiential education programs.

About the Enrichment Studies Unit: ESU brings more than 1500 school aged students to the Queen's campus each year to experience what is like to be a university student and take enrichment courses taught by Queen's students, faculty and community professionals. Our mission is to motivate youth by challenging them academically, developing them personally, and inspiring them with an exceptional Queen's University experience. ESU's Teacher Enrichment program provides teachers with STEM and technology learning opportunities that can be taken back to the classroom and re-created.
