History of the University

Queen's University at Kingston was founded in 1841 as a result of the desire of the Reverend James McFarlane to establish a university in Upper Canada. The university was located in Kingston, Ontario, and was known as Queen's College. The college opened its doors in 1842 with an initial enrollment of approximately 50 students. In 1957, Queen's University became a constituent of the University of Toronto, and the two universities operated together until 1966, when Queen's University became an independent institution. Today, Queen's University is one of the leading universities in Canada, offering a wide range of undergraduate and graduate programs in arts, sciences, engineering, health sciences, and professional programs. The university has a strong reputation for its research and teaching, and is consistently ranked among the top universities in Canada and around the world.
Program Options Leading to Bachelor of Education or Diploma in Education

The University offers two one-year undergraduate degree programs leading to the Bachelor of Education degree or the Diploma in Education. These programs are offered by the Faculty of Education and the Faculty of Continuing Education.

Bachelor of Education Program

The Bachelor of Education program is designed for students who wish to pursue a career in teaching. The program is offered in two options: Elementary Education and Secondary Education. Each option requires the completion of a series of courses in education, mathematics, and one of the social sciences.

Diploma in Education Program

The Diploma in Education program is designed for students who wish to pursue a career in teaching at the elementary level. The program requires the completion of a series of courses in education, mathematics, and one of the social sciences.

Admission Requirements for the Program

To be eligible for admission to the Bachelor of Education program, applicants must have completed a four-year university degree with a minimum of 60% in their final year. Applicants must also have completed a minimum of one year of full-time study in a field of social studies or humanities.

The role of the teacher and the way that the teacher organizes the subject matter is fundamental to the development of educational programs. The design and implementation of educational programs, on the other hand, is based on a broad understanding of the importance of activities and processes, such as teaching, learning, and curriculum development. The courses are designed to provide a comprehensive understanding of these processes and their applications in real-world settings.

The focus is on the development of subject matter, emphasizing the importance of understanding the subject matter and how it is organized in educational programs.
